Kohl Idea: Army Unit With Paris

* Integrated Force Would Be a Test Of Cooperation

- Chancellor Helmnt Kohl urged Friday the formation of a joint French-West German fighting unit, linking old enemies in a unique integrated force to strengthen the European pillar of the North Atlantic alliance.

"We want to progress with military-political cooperation," he said at a news conference. "I foresee a joint, fully integrated military unit, such as an army brigade."

The notion of French soldiers marching alongside Germans, their enemies in three major wars in the last 120 years, has gamed ground in recent years as Bonn and Paris lorged increasingly close ties within the European Community.

It has been given impetus by fears among West German conser-vatives that West German and European interests may be subjugated to the U.S. desire for arms agreements with the Soviet Union and the need to redraw defense strategy in the age of nuclear arms control.

Mr. Kohl said there was "nothing which dictates against the idea" members of the congressional com-of the joint unit, and nothing in the charter of the North Atlantic Trea-lyan-contra affair have concluded charter of the North Atlantic Trealy Organization to prevent it.

an experiment to determine how the concept of closely integrated armed forces could be developed. and he noted that Paris and Bonn already had plans for joint training of general staff officers.

This does not run counter to close ties with the United States," Mr. Kohl said. "The U.S. is extremely interested is seeing us in Europe work more closely together

"The Atlantic partnership is fur-damental to the security of the Fed-eral Republic," he added. "It must be increased by strengthened European cooperation in security." High Court

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) -Socialist Party supporters attacked Malta's courthouse Friday, breaking furniture, burning documents and a magistrate's office and forcing the postponement of a trial.

Several thousand party members or supporters had gathered outside the court to express solidarity with 15 men being tried on charges of corrupt practices in the May 9 elections. In the voting, the Socialists lost power to the Nationalists after 16

You Call This a Spring? Wait'll You See Summer

By Thomas Netter Special to the Herald Tribune
GENEVA — It was the eve of summer, and business should have been booming Friday at Le Glacier du Mont Blanc, a small café and ice cream stand on the lakeside promenade along the port in central Geneva. Instead, the red folding chairs were leaning empty and wet, against the white tables, whose tops were splattered with dirty puddles of rain.

"It's bad and getting worse," said the proprietor, as she looked up in vain toward the leaden, rainy sky frowning over the lake. "Business is absolutely nothing these days, and it's the same all along here. If it keeps up like this, I'll have nothing to do."

It rained Friday in Geneva, and the day before, and the day before, and the day before that. It's rained nearly every day so far this month, and it's raining , nearly everywhere else in central and northern Europe. It rained for the past 20 days in northern Germany, and it's rained twice as much as normal in the English Midlands, and it's been raining nearly every day in northern France, and in fact nearly everywhere from London to Warsaw, according to the London Weather Center. But things could be worse just before the start of summer on Sunday: In the Swiss, French and Italian alps, it snowed Thursday night, closing some alpine passes.

"Yes, summer does begin Monday, but temperature and weatherwise, we don't see any change," said Wolfgang Raatz of the West German Weather Service in Essen. "It's going to be cold and wet," he said, "not very pleas-

Dr. Claude Lenfant, the director of the institute, said the study provided "significant new information" on the benefits of lowering elevated blood cholesterol and "very dramatic evidence" that drugs and diet could achieve a large reduction in cholesterol levels.

Previous studies have shown that cholesterollowering treatments could reduce the rate of death and sickness from heart disease, but they have been inconclusive as to whether such treatments could prevent, slow or reduce the fatty deposits that clog the arteries.

The new findings indicate that many patients may be able to improve the health of their arteries rather than maintaining them in a static, risky state, Dr. Lenfant said. The study was conducted among 162 non-

TOKYO - The Japanese government and Bosing Co. both took responsibility Friday for the crash in 1985 of a Japan Air Lines Boeing 747 in which 520 people died.

An official government report, released Friday, said faulty repairs to the plane in 1978 by the U.S. aircraft maker Boeing and inade-quate inspection by Transport Ministry inspectors had caused the crash, the worst single-aircraft disaster in history.

The one clear cause was the faulty repair work by Boeing, said Shun Takeda, the Transport Ministry official leading the government's accident investigation com-

But the report also criticized the Japanese inspectors for not check-ing the repairs properly before signing a clearance document.

In a separate statement issued in Tokyo, Boeing said it had not seen the final report but agreed with an earlier similar draft report that the accident had been caused by the incorrect repairs, which remained undetected during scheduled inspections.

Boeing said it had made tests and provided equipment for aircraft to insure that a similar accident could not happen again.

Transport Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto said: "Repair instructions themselves were appropriate. If the repair work had been done faithfully to the instructions, the accident would not have occurred." The president of Japan Air Lines, Susumu Yamaji, said that AL was now conducting checks when it received repaired aircraft.

The plane, JAL Flight 123, hit Mount Osutaka, north of Tokyo, on Aug. 12, 1985, after a bulkhead separating the pressurized cabin from the unpressurized tail burst, fracturing key control systems.

The report unequivocally cleared the JAL crew of all responsibility. A panel member, Osamu Fujiwara, said that the captain and his crew, all suffering from lack of oxygen, had done their best to regain control of the aircraft.

There could have been nothing in their training to prepare them for that situation," he said.

The report said the impact would have killed everyone in the front of the plane instantly but that some further back probably survived for a while before dying of shock and In a separate set of recommendations, the investigators said that large aircraft operating in Japan should have fail-safe systems that were truly fail-safe.

White House Dinner: How to Get Invited

How does one get invited to a White House state dinner, outside of being part of the entourage of the guest of honor, a key political figure or a power in international affairs? "The one thing we always look for when preparing a state dinner is to include people who have excelled in their fields," says Linda Fanlkner, the White House social secretary. "A serious author, a eriebrated musician or dancer or actor or sports figure" would all be prime candidates. No More Hostage Deals

With the kidnapping Wednesday of Charles Glass, a television journalist, nine his job with the ABC television network, Americans are now held hostage in Beirut. His situation is cruel and his abduction al for a book. That book was to draw on an outrage, and the State Department speaks for the United States in demanding the unconditional release of Mr. Glass and all other foreigners now held captive by Lebanese zealots.

But as Mr. Glass surely must have known, there is not much else that can or should be done — no deals, no ransom, no secret sale of missiles to imagined Iranian "moderates," no swaps for prisoners elsewhere. To yield on any of this would simply lead to the kidnapping of more Americans, and not only in Beirut.

There can no longer be innocents mercifully, to be gone.

A Sensible Budget Plan

gressional Democrats have finally agreed to and the president's phony claim only compounds the difficulty of getting anywhere. sensible cut in the federal deficit. It courageously seeks to establish the principle that increases in military spending be covered by tax increases. Its one major drawback derives from its very boldness; if Congress and Mr. Reagan cannot agree on taxes, the total deficit reduction will be small.

The big plus in the resolution now adopted by House and Senate conferees is the linkage of higher military spending and higher taxes. No more feeding the Defense Department by cuts in social programs or by enlarging the national debt.

The big minus is the fragility of the compromise it represents. Republicans took no part in it, and the House and Senate Democrats were deeply divided over priorities. Only after the president needled them on television Monday night did the Democrats finally settle their differences. It is an open question whether the party's leaders can hold their majorities in line on appropriations and taxes in the face of President Reagan's veto threats

- and, probably, some actual vetoes. The government will run about $180 billion in the red this year. That is a $40 billion improvement on last year, but far above the ceiling of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget bill. The statute's target for next year is $108 billion, and the president still pretends his budget would get

With a prod from President Reagan, con-there. Forget it. The target is too severe,

The budget committees say that their resolution would cut the deficit by $37 billion next year. That is a responsible level given concerns about deeper cuts triggering a recession. Realistically, it is also about what the president's budget would have accomplished. On the spending side, the resolution allots less for defense and more for social programs than Mr. Reagan wants. On revenues, it proposes $19 billion of new taxes that he does not want, and a one-shot infusion of $7 billion by a prepayment of rural electrification borrowings.

Assuming both houses adopt the resolution, the next step is effecting legislation, and none is more contentious than the tax bill. Its size is fixed by the resolution — $19 billion the first year and $64 billion over three years. Its contents are yet to be determined; prominent possibilities include higher taxes on gasoline, liquor and cigarettes, and higher estate taxes. Regardless, more revenue is essential for credible deficit reduction, and linking it to defense spending is both valid and clever. The plan is to offer the president a choice: $289 billion of new appropriations for defense if he rejects the tax package, and $7 billion more if he approves it.

Mr. Reagan will not find the plan attractive. It is to be hoped that moderate and responsible Republicans in Congress will. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Turkey's Success Story

Turkey went into a foreign debt crisis five nearly in half, and the inflation rate years earlier than the Latin American countries did. Now, a decade later, it is emerging as an example of success. Many people in the U.S. Congress think that Latin America is being forced by its enormous debts into a downward spiral from which the only escape is to cancel the debts on 1 grand scale. But the Turkish case argues persuasively that, with good internal management, even a country that has borrowed far too much can restore itself to strong growth and normal access to credit.

In 1977, Turkey ran out of money to service its debts. Its first response was simply to devalue its currency to improve its competitiveness. But devaluation alone accomplished little, a point that uneasy Americans are beginning to suspect may also apply to the United States. After several years of floundering and a military coup, Turkey set itself on a course of rigorous economic reform. As in many of the Latin countries, the tradition there had been inward looking. nationalistic, highly protectionist and suspicious of the rich countries. For seven years a turnaround has been under way. The International Monetary Fund recently published an illuminating description of it by George sible that Americans had often thought, Konits, one of its economists. First, the Turks cut their budget deficit dropped sharply. Then, with demand under control, they peeled the restrictions off imports and exports, letting the market set the exchange rate. Exports soured, and by last year the foreign deficit, even after all the payments for debt service, had dropped to one-fourth the 1980 level.

Some economists have said Turkey is a special case because its allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, in view of its strategic location, were willing to keep lending heavily as it embarked on this transition. It is true that the IMF, the World Bank and several governments put up a lot of money to those senators who oppose further leading to the Latin countries, arguing that it piles up unpayable debts more hopelessly than ever.

It has not worked out that way in Turkey. While Turkey now owes more than it did in 1977, its economy is stable and growing rapidly. The commercial banks will lend to it without coercion, as they will not to most of the Latins. Turkey's government is becoming less undemocratic and heavy-handed. It is still a country under strain. But it has demonstrated that many things are posand sometimes still think, were not.

The New Securities Cop

When the U.S. stock markets go through a long unbroken rise, experience warns, loose practices proliferate in the flow of quick money. As the policeman on that beat, the Securities and Exchange Commission has the arduous job of enforcing the safety rules. David Ruder, the Northwestern University law professor now nominated to be the next irman of the SEC, is about to step into an office that is likely to become increasingly demanding wherever the market goes. Enforcing the safety rules will be only half the job, for some of those rules are badly out. of date and need to be rewritten. Congress is already at work revising the definition of insider trading, and legislation on corporate takeovers is likely. The next chairman of the SEC is going to spend many days, and some nights, working with congressional committees as they rewrite the securities laws.

Financial ingenuity in recent years has developed many new instruments, and new markets, that have never been tested by a severe downturn in prices. The present financial boom has been running for nearly five years. In that time the Dow Jones average of industrial stock prices has tripled. Money generated by this surge is going into a great variety of esoteric securities and trading strategies that have never been through ever a mild slump. It is not simple to protect the public while the market is going up, as the lvan Boesky case suggests. It is even more difficult, and no less essential, to think ahead to the downturn that lies somewhere ahead. What protections will be needed then?

Mr. Ruder, who brings a fine reputation to this office, says he will continue to enforce the laws against insider trading with the same vigor as the outgoing chairman. John Shad, and his staff at the SEC have devoted to it. But Congress will want to know his views on a wide range of questions about financial deregulation.

The case for deregulation is efficiency; the case against it is stability. Congress and the SEC try to balance the two, and the ideal balancing point shifts with time and circumstance. There has been a lot of deregulation. much of it useful, over the past decade. But currently, with stock prices and speculative fever high, it is time for regulators to lean back in the direction of stability.

Litmus Test: Was Rust a Conspirator or a Romantic?

P ARIS—It is all but impossible to persuade the European man on the street that there was not "something" behind Mathias Rust's flight across Soviet territory to Red Square. A casual poll published in a French magazine sees most people con-vinced that the flight was inspired by the Russians themselves, perhaps by a faction around Mikhail Gorbachev, to discredit rivals — or conceivably by the CIA. But there is little doubt, to quote one person, that "there was a hidden hand" behind it. A friend once observed that one reason Italians believe in conspiracies is that there are a lot of conspiracies in Italy. Who in the Anglo-American world, a few years ago, would have credited a rumor of the existence of a vastly powerful secret Masonic lodge influencing Italy's intelligence ser-vices, army, banks and industrial companies, planning to seize the government itself - and strong enough to have a serious chance of doing so? We would have said that was Fu Manchu stuff. But the existence of the P-2 lodge is now history.

France has repeatedly experienced conspiracies about which the most outrageous rumors circulate, and which never are quite resolved. A prominent (and aristocratic) politician was murdered in the 1970s in an affair never yet explained. François Mitterrand himself, when an ambitious young politician, was involved in a curious affair where he claimed to have escaped an assassination attempt that later was revealed to have been a fake. Who was deceived by whom? It has never been settled.

No wonder the French and the Italians cannot really believe that Richard Nixon was brought down by a dumb burglary meant to steal information on his rivals, rather than by a meticulous conspiracy of liberal politicians and press. People in Europe even now find it hard to believe that By William Pfaff innocent of the world's ways, as Oliver North and Fawn Hall — the Harold Lloyd, and adoring assistant, of American geopolitics.

One could, I think, speak of a Florentine, or Machiavellian, view of the world, as against the romantic. The American conviction that the world waits to be made over, and can be made over by the waits to be made over, and can be made over by the action of a single man, or of a man and a girl — willing, sometimes, "to go above the written law"— is romantic. The European view, that events are settled by forces beyond the ordinary man's reckoning is disabused and anti-romantic.

Americans owe much of their way of looking at things to the openness and opportunity of Ameri-can society, and to a history that has, aside from the Civil War, been innocent of tragedy. There is also a cultural inheritance from another supremely also a cultural inheritance from another supremely confident society, that of imperial Britain.

Britain has believed that a great man — the insouciant Drake, Nelson with the telescope to his blind eye, the fictional Richard Hannay, even an inspired lad, Kim — could save a kingdom or an empire. British popular literature is full of this, from Kipling through John Buchan to James Bond. It is the essential plot of the whole genre of espionage literature, always a British specialty.

The mythical figure of American romanticism is, of course, the frontiersman, who evolved into the lone cowhand, sorting out trouble and drifting along, to see the other side of the mountain, leaving history behind.

There is, I think, nothing like this in modern European literature, even though recent European history, far more than American, has been dominated by towering individuals - Hitler, Stalin, preferred to look for historical explanations in the abstractions of class, generation, the "forces" of social and economic interest. People and press are fascinated by conspiracies, real or fancied.

What appears lacking is a real confidence in individual action. The American presidential ritual is unthinkable here in Europe — that every four years the entire nation absorbs itself for months in searching for and anointing a single individual to the mission of renewing the nation, restoring to it a boundless hope, no matter what has gone before.

It is an American strength that we go on with such confidence. It may also be that the pessimism of Europeans — and what I have been describing is a form of pessimism, a submission to uncontrolled forces — is a transient product of the events of the 20th century. From Renaissance to Revolution and Industrial Revolution. Europe possessed supreme confidence in its own and humanity's possibilities. Colonialism, imperialism — these were possible only because of an explosion of confidence, a European conviction of mastery.

Europe today is the product of two world wars, inflation and revolution, totalitarianism - and genocide. People only now are emerging from this, still shocked, unsure of themselves, unconfident still shocked, imsure of themselves, innountdent about their civilization, uncertain that all of that is over. During the last 70 years they have been given good reason for pessimism. But if their present pessimism is the result of these recent events, then it is the product of change, and will itself change. How interesting it would be if Mathi-as Rust indeed turned out to be a deredevil, who did it, alone, for the simple joy of doing it — who did it for the hell of it!

W ASHINGTON — The drubbing taken by the Labor Party in the British elections is the latest in a series of recent losses by liberal-left parties in major industrial democracies. They send a clear message to Democratic Party presidential candidates in 1980: Demonstrate that you can effectively manage the economy and social wel-fare programs and that you have a firm national security policy. In the principal countries of Western Europe with electorates most similar to America's -- West Germany, France and Britain - centerright parties have won convincing victories throughout the 1980s.

In 1982 and again earlier this year, Helmut Kohl's Christian Democratic Party wiped out the liberal Social Democratic Party, which had dominated West German politics for years. In France, the Socialist Party was repudiated last year by voters in favor of the conservative neo-Gaullists.

And, of course, in the United States, the Democratic Party has lost both presidential elections in this decade. Liberal or left-of-center parties generperceived to have lost control of inflation and mismanaged the welfare state (France) or because they were perceived as weak on national security issues (West Germany) or for both reasons (United States and Britain).

Voters in these democracies did not elect right-of-center leaders to repeal the welfare state or to promote a confrontational foreign policy. In all four countries, conservative parties have been unable to sharply reduce social benefits. The Reagan administration has left the building blocks of the New Deal and Great Society in place because of their basis of the building blocks. cause of their broad public support.

But national resources have limited by declining rates of real growth, and voters have watched their personal incomes eroded by inflation. Those voters want what liberal parties have failed to supply: economic growth with moderate inflation and a more efficient welfare state.

In France, for example, President François Mitterrand stimulated the economy in 1981 in order to reduce high unemployment (much as the Carter administration did in 1977 and 1978), and thereby set in motion an inflationary spiral that led to his The British Labor Party this year

The very factors that led to Laliberal-leftist parties in France and West Germany will confront the Democratic Party as its presidential hopefuls are sometimes driven by these activists into early commitments on issues that become liabilities in the general election. During the 1980 campaign, for example, obeisance to a "nuclear freeze" (despite a Soviet advantage in heavy missiles) and avoidance of any military assistance to the democratically elected government of El Salva-dor fighting Communist insurgents became litmus tests. The 1984 Democratic platform virtually precincled military efforts to keep the Gulf open, a reversal of President Jimmy Carter's pledge to do so.

The old thesis that one must run left in the Democratic primaries and then move to the center in the general election is shopworn, because, given the commitments that must be made before the Democratic Convention, it is difficult to run as a centrist. Mr. Car- to The New York Times.

An Uncertain Europe Rethinks Its Defenses

By Flora Lewis

PARIS - There is a certain Western Europe as people begin to contemplate the uncertain prospects of strategic change once disarmament actually starts.

For the moment it is not going anywhere, for lack of impetus from lead-ers. Margaret Thatcher of Britain, whom former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France has called "a remarkable professional, surely the best in Europe," is the only figure in power with the perceived strength to launch an effective initiative.

But she does not seem interested. Like the others, her focus is on home affairs. "And that means England, not even Scotland," a British official said in private indiscretion. President Reagan arrived home from the Venice summit meeting claiming broad allied agreement, but it went no fur-growth and deploring the Gulf war, ferment just below the top in not on what to do next. All the leaders are dragging their feet.

Still: pressures to recognize the need for new plans are mounting. In France, the focus is on new defense concepts based on some kind of French-German military integration. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and former Chancellor Heimut Schmidt of West Germany have come out for a joint .command under a French general and Mr. Giscard d'Estaing would have France declare that its independent suclear deterrent could also be invoked to protect West Germany. These are far-reaching ideas, implying a reversal of historic policies. Even the many proponents refuse to face the full implications and there-fore are not yet taken really seriously. The key question ducked is what that would mean for the Atlantic alliance; it is answered only with vague allu-sions to a need for "coordination." All West German forces are now committed to NATO. Would a French commander in charge of all or part of them in turn be integrated within the alliance structure, thus ending France's proclaimed supreme autonomy? Impossible, is the unanimous French response. In that case, would Germans under the command be removed from NATO, almost surely de-stroying the alliance? That is definitely not the aim. So the impasse remains.

But the reasoning leading up to the final barrier is powerful. Together, with the geographical depth of France and its access to the Atlantic. French and German forces could present a much more impressive conven-tional strength, reducing but not eliminating reliance on the nuclear deterrent in Europe.

Two fears hannt the French now. One is that German dreams of reunification will lead to neutralism. There has been a good deal of speculative comment here that Mikhail Gorbachev might attempt to seduce the Germans with such an offer.

It appears outlandish. High officials in Moscow make it clear that the last thing the Russians want to see in Eorope is the re-emergence of a single Germany, which would have great economic and political power even if pledged to nonalignment. And though he draws all the advantages he can from relations with West Germany. the East German leader, Erich Honecker, or his seccessor, would not easily accede to disappearance of the rump state they have built. Further, what would Poland do? Still, the Full military ties with West Germany would insure against the possibility.
The second French fear, ironic though it may sound from a country that expelled American troops, is that the United States will withdraw much of its forces from Europe and "decouple," substantially diminishing its guarantees for Western Europe's de-fense. Despite mounting budget con-straints and occasional U.S. sugges-tions that this would startle the Europeans into doing more for them-selves, it is also unlikely. The basics of the alliance remain unchanged and need not be affected by nuclear, and it must be hoped regional problems and the need for minimal and balanced arms limitations.

But If the Democratic Parts of the development of the first parts of th the projection of democratic values, eventual conventional, arms reducpolicy, which does not yet exist 1988 is to avoid the fate of the British Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, who plans Labor Party in 1987, it must become to run for president of Europe if that post is ever created, now heads the foreign affairs committee of France's National Assembly. He intends to use the platform as a "center of reflection." This fall, he says, he will convene joint hearings with the defense committee on "strategy for France and the West."

This is a useful approach, which the U.S. Congress might consider adopting. If governments will not propose and innovate, why shouldn't legislators try to work out a frame-work for meeting coming challenges?

And He Said (to Reagan): Six Days Shalt Thou Labor . . .

WASHINGTON — In the middle of Ronald Reagan's seventh, year as president, the administration's policy seems to be without form and void of the bright, bold colors that characterized the early years. But the powers of an incumbent president are awesome, If Mr. Reagan decides to let there be light in the policy darkness now upon the face of his administration, there will be light.

To revive the policy thrust and drive of the administration, a week of stration, a week of new policy initiatives is needed. Here is one possible package.

1) Build a limited missile defeat In the morning of the first day, Mr. Resean should announce that as long as the ABM treaty is in force and continues to be in the interest of the United States, America should fully live up to its terms. Article 3 of the treaty provides that both the Soviet Union and the United States may have "one ABM system deployment area ... and no more than one kundred ABM interceptor missiles."

The Soviet Union already has such a system, and it now stands poised, ready to provide a limited defense for many important Soviet targets.

President Reagan should order the immediate construction and deployment of 100 interceptor missiles. The technology is at hand, the cost is modest. If done on a crash basis, an effective limited missile defense that would In West Germany, the decline of protect the entire country against a the successful Social Democratic Par-small number of nuclear missiles, rogue Soviet officer, could be in place before the president leaves office.

As painful as this would be, it would be far more painful for America to allow these unconscionable deficits to roll on. 3) Issue gold-backed Treasury bonds. In the morning of the third day, Mr. Reagan should direct the Treasury secretary to issue $1 billion worth of gold bonds, whose interest and principal would be payable in ounces of pure gold. Syria Is Said to Demand Immediate Release of 2 Held Hostage in Beirut

BEIRUT — Syria has demanded the immediate release of a kid-napped American journalist, tarles Glass, and of the son of the Lebanese defense minister, sources close to the Syrian Army command said Friday.

The kidnapping Wednesday in Being was seen as a major challenge to Syria's efforts to pacify Lebanon.

The sources said Syrian officers contacted leaders of the Shitte Moslem Hezbollah, or Party of Grod, during the night and "firmly demanded the quick release" of Mr. Glass, 36, and of Ali Osseiran, 40, son of Defense Minister Adel

The sources said the command also contacted Sheikh Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah, a Shrite religious leader who is believed to be

"No threats were made," one source said. "But it was clearly stated that the Syrian command regards the abduction as detrimental to Syria's role in safeguarding West Beirur's security."

Zoos May Disappear From Italian Cities

Zoos are closing in northern litaly, and this week's election of Greens party deputies to the Italian parliament may well make the entire country's zoos an endan-

The offensive against the zoos started two years ago when Gian Luigi Melega, a journalist and deputy for the Radical Party, submitted a bill calling for the removal of zoos in cities larger than 300,000. He said Italy's 60 major zoos kept animals in cramped, filthy cages and the keepers often were unqualified. American Hospitals Poach British Nurses

Representatives of 15 U.S. hospitals arrived in London this week to recruit as many as 1.000 British nurses, who are in short supply in both countries. The American arrival was heralded by a media blitz leading up to a three-day Nursing Jobs Fair that opened in London Thursday.

With the prospects of higher pay, hundreds of British nurses were expected to attend the fair. Richard Devito, the fair's American coordinator, said the lowest starting salary for a nurse in the United States is $22,000 (£13,415), and a nurse in a management position can earn between $35,000 and $45,000. Private TV channels said the action will lead to an annual loss in revenue of about five percent. Commercials for alcoholic drinks had already been forbidden on public TV.

DAEDALUS: The Dream Lives, on Fragile Wings

Mr. Tremml's percentage of body A two-and-a-balf-hour human-powered flight, he said, is "a lot more difficult" than a two-and-ahalf-hour triathlon." You can't ever back off and get your wind again," he said. "The plane needs a minimum amount of power just to fly. As soon as you back off, you start losing altitude." The roots of the modern Daedalus project can be traced to 1979, when an MIT team built an easypedaling, 10-mile-an-hour aircraft named Chrysalis to fly across the English Channel. At stake was a prize of £50,000 put up by Henry Kremer, a British industrialist, for the first cross-channel flight under human power.

But only seven days after the first airborne test of Chrysalis, the Gossamer Albatross made its historic flight.

The MIT team went on to build a smaller aircraft called Monarch, which in 1984 set a world speed record for human-powered flight by negotiating a diamond-shaped 1,500-meter (1636-yard) course at 21 miles an hour.

The manager of the Daedalus project, John S. Langford 3d, is a former aeronautical engineer with Lockheed Corp. He holds master's degrees in aeronautics and astro-nautics and in defense policy and arms control; is a doctoral candidate in aeronautics and public policy at MIT; and is currently a researcher at the Institute for Defense Analyses in Alexandria, Vit-

After building the Monarch, he remembers, the team was looking around for something to do next, "something that would drive the technology" of man-powered flight. Duplicating Daedalus, he said, "seemed like a natural." The flight from Crete, however, would be more than triple the distance traveled by the Gossamer Albatross, and none of the other manpowered aircraft had flown longer than five minutes. "We didn't really know if it was possible," Mr. angford said.

So with $74,000 provided by the Smithsonian's Air and Space Mu-seum and MIT, the team spent a year researching everything from high-tech aerodynamics to the meteorology of the Aegean Sea to determine if the project was even fea-sible. They concluded it was. But just barely.

"One of the crucial unknowns was physiology," Mr. Langford said. The U.S. Army and others have done research on what the human body is capable of doing in spurts, he said, "but there has been very little real medical research on endurance physiology."

You can't ever back off and get your wind again. The plane needs a minimum amount of power just to fly.

Finally, they strapped him in a stationary cycle "ergometer" in the basement and had him pedal for four hours at power settings 10 percent higher than they thought the flight would ever need.

While a lot of athletes could pump for more power than Mr. Tremmi could, he produced more power per unit of body weight -which is much more important in a plane than on a bicycle," Mr. Tremmi said.

T ONDON -Auction houses are taking big chances in their anxiety to keep up their turnover and cultivate a glamorous image as sellers of stupendous mage as Christie's £5,429,930 (about $8,850,000) auction of "Magnificent French Furniture and Sculp ture" on Wednesday night, with "only" 17 percent of the items failing to sell, will be hailed as a tri-

The centerpiece was an extraordinary bureau of the early 18th century from Knole Park in Kent. Scenes in the chinoiserie taste show orientals ambling about in garden settings. The combination of mother of pearl, and green, red and binestained shell inlay on a yellow brass ground is overwhelmingly Baroque. Floral garlands running along the edges increase the seething effect. It could not be further removed from the French decorative art to which Christie's originally ascribed it, nor come nearer to German Baroque around 1700-1720 with its penchant for vivid

On closer inspection, it appears to be inspired not by Chinese art but by Moghul India, of which it displays the composition, the use of color, and the typical handling of trees and birds. The Indian influence, which has gone unnoticed so far, would not be surprising in southern Germanic lands. In Schloss Ambras, in Austria, one room had its walls covered with album leaves from Indian sources. That alone is enough to make the bureau one of the great sensations to come up at auction in the last quarter of a century. The second sensation in the sale, if less unexpected in art history terms, was a Louis XVI commode

Equally remarkable in its way is fireplace set made in 1788 by the most famous of all French 18th century bronze-makers, Pierre-Philippe Thomire. It consists of an ormolu and steel grate, signed and dated in full, and two columns supporting the black bronze figures of Apollo and Fame - Apollo being also signed in full. Surprisingly, the grate is purely English in design and matches a drawing from an fers from the others in draftsman-

Indeed, on D-day all four items gracefully ascended far above the estimates. The gueridon doubled the high at £121,000 while the Thomire fireplace set nearly tripled the high estimate at £154,000. not three times the price. The first reason for its failure to do so lies in the hesitant labeling, oscillating between France, Germany and Italy. A second factor may have been the hasty restoration work in some areas. And a third one is perhaps to be sought in the often unflattering context of the sale.

The fillers varied erratically in quality. Some of the better ones included pieces formerly in the collection of Antony Tannouri seen at auction at Drouot in Paris on Nov. 15, 1983. A London weekly scoffed at Christie's for taking in pieces that had been so recently sold and and for being ungentlemanly for selling items consigned for sale as a result of a Paris court decision. That criticism is hardly relevant since trade sources say that these did not sell but went back into the hands of the creditor. Processing goods is speedier still in Impresionist and Modern Master paintings. No auction house can afford to reject good to high quality pieces, which most of these were. Sure enough, most did very well.

A Louis XVI parquetry commode a encoignures doubled its Drouot bid as it rose to £126,500. Several lots from the Louis XIV period sold extremely well. By contrast, it was regrettable to include a Louis XVI regulator clock and cabinet which, by Christie's own admission, was originally veneered in ebony. It failed to sell at £190,000 as it did in Paris at 2.1 million francs. Christie's apparently erred on a bigger scale, if the opinion of the top Paris dealers means anything.

One of them, admired even by his peers for his sharp eye, says that the pair of Louis XV giltwood stools" bears a regrettable resemblance to 20th century production. This makes the £9,350 price somewhat inflated. He is equally unflattering about a pair of "Transitional giltwood chaises in the manner of Louis Delanois" - sold at £6.050; laughing off a "Louis XV petite commode" — bought in at £13,000, album covering the workshop pro-duction of the cabinetmaker John Linnell. The design, now in the Victoria and Albert Museum, dif-the real disappointment was the conduction of the cabinetmaker John Linnell. The design, now in the for a lot more than £550,000. at £450,000 - luckily for all parties, it would seem, excepting the unidentified owner. A "Louis XVI mahogany commode by H. Riesener" met with the same devastating comments. That also failed to sell — at "only" £40,000. Between the wonderful £550,000 Louis XVI commode and the extraordinary £1.21 million bureau, it may have adversely affected their fate.

Some problems also affected the works of art. One or two had been seen knocking about the market. Trade sources believe Christie's must thank its lucky star for getting away with its bronze statue of Mars by Giambologna, its great rarity notwithstanding. Most of the gilding is, as Christie's exquisitely puts pondered. Next time it may be it. "partially" refreshed. And,

Christie's estimate, "£500,000 plus," suggests that it barely sold above the reserve. Add to that the pressure of a number of decorative pieces that several sperialists laughed at — from a "pair of Louis XVI ormelu mounted ap or at least substantial accomplised ple-green Sèvres potpourri vases." sold for £15,400 to a "pair of Louis XVI ormolu-mounted green lacquered marble vases," bought in at £20,000. But emotional reticence is not lack of emotion. Seiji Ozawa's con-cert with the Orchestre National de France was a worthy tribute to a master of orchestral color, but also to the darker feelings that sometimes break through. The violence of the Piano Concerto for the Left Hand, but also its lyricism and wit can rarely have been better served than in Leon Fleisher's performance, highly charged and of stun-ning virtuosity. (A few days earlier French television showed a fleeting bit of history — some of a film showing Paul Wittgenstein — the one-armed Austrian pianist who commissioned the work - playing it in Paris, Ravel conducting.) Marilyn Horne lavished sumptuous vocalism on "Sheherazade," and Ozawa wound up the concert of the composer's transcriptions of the works of others, such as the orchestration of Mussorgsky's in glowing style with an imaginative juxtaposition, "Valses nobles et sentimentales" followed without a break by "La Valse": two homages to the Viennese waltz that stand alone yet enhance each other. an apotheosis of the waltz that ends in a danse macabre, the collapse of an era if not a civilization.

The only concert devoted to rarities was that, with the National under Leonard Slatkin, devoted mainly to the three "cantatas" composed in 1901-02-03 in Ravel's famously unsuccessful attempts to win the Prix de Rome - even though he was already writing mature and important works. These works are really quasi operation scenes, set to imposed texts. Some have seen in these scores - which throb with varied echoes of 19thcentury opera - a deliberate sendup of the conservative composers on the jury. It is more likely that he really wanted the Prix de Rome and was willing to suppress his imagination and write expert pastiches that might win it.

The Mysterious Aura of Charles Matton

By Joseph Fitchett

D ARIS - Charles Matton is an artistic prodigy who has invented his own art form — miniaturizing his old studies in meaning de-tail, then painting early realistic canvases based on blown-up pho-tos of these dollhouse-sized envi-

The paintings evoke the world of Edward Hopper (partly because many of Matton's studios were in New York), But Matton's technical process reflects his concern to be contemporary, to find a new basis for figurative art. His show - displaying his cavigraphs based on them - conveys the mysterious aura of his work. Jean Baudrillard, who wrote the introduction to the show's catalogue, says: "The magical power of the miniature equivalent of things, the opposite of their magnification into sculpture, is well-known By concentrating them into a small space, which thereby becomes fantastic, one rediscovers their quintessence." Françoise Sagan says of him: "Matton is a big peinter on a little planer." His technique of reduction-enlargement seems to control the emotion in his work, reducing them "at least in appearance to what is probably the right moral scale for us in the real world," she wrote this week in Globe magazine.

Matton's prestigious admirers know him as a familiar character in the Parisian world of night people. In the 1970s, he was one of the most successful French illustrators in magazines in Paris and New York, including nude centerfolds that display the eroticism that recurs in his work today. He devoted himself to commercial work after deciding that he was never going to get serious critical attention as 2 igurative artist. The postwar French art establishment, avid for abstract art and then for Pop Art, dismissed realistic work, even that of Matton, whom Alberto Giacometti regarded as the finest draftsmun of his generation.

Five years ago, Matton moved to the countryside near Paris to devote himself to painting. Looking for a new way to make realism credible, he began experimenting with the tiny environments. The painstaking reconstructions newspapers the size of matchbook that are readable, hundreds of minature paintrubes, painted wallpa-per covered with tiny graffiti, the outline of each brick, the stuffing of an armchair - are so perfect that they create the illusion of being actual rooms when they are photographed. By manipulating the rooms through camera angles. Mutton can quickly complete a big Charles that gives a perfect illusion of being a realistic painting. This process, inexplicably, creates a kind of visual authority, perhaps by filtering out the artist's subjective

Traders and analysts said that new rules for the quarterly phethe so-called triple-witching, the quarterly phe-nomenon in which stock options, stock index futures and options on the futures expire the same day, worked fairly well.

Under the old rules, all three classes of instruments expired at the close of trading on the third Friday of the last month of each quarter, with settlement of contracts based on the closing index and stock prices.

The new rules provided for trading in some active contracts, such as Standard & Poor's 500 index futures, to cease at Thursday's close, with settlement on the basis of Friday's opening prices for the underlying stocks. Other index futures expired as before, at the close Friday. But analysts said that many players were on the sidelines throughout the typically volatile session. They cautioned that because the market is at all-time highs and is widely regarded as overbought, there was little chance for strong upside movement in any case.

Memories of Walter Heller, Persuader to Presidents

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

FW YORK - Walter W. Heller, who died this past week at the age of 71, raised the role of the president's Council of Economic Advisers to the highest level it has attained since that body was established by the Employment Act of 1946.

One reason for Mr. Heller's brilliant performance as chief economic adviser to Presidents Kennedy and Johnson was his use of the English language. He could make economic ideas not just or the ringuish language. He could make economic meas not just intelligible but arresting and persuasive to presidents, congressmen, business and labor leaders, journalists and everyone else—and without debasing or distorting the ideas he was pushing. He loved metaphor. "The fine mist of incipient inflation may be travited into light rain." he be turning into light rain," he warned early in 1966, about a year after he left Washington to return to teaching at the University of Minnesota, But President Johnson, determined to pursue the war in Vietnam without going to Congress for a tax increase, was slow to heed the warnings of Mr. Heller and his other economic advisers, and the inflationary rain came down. Whether in failure or success, however, Mr. Heller demonstrated that economic rhetoric is the crucial link between economic analysis and policy making. As Donald T. McCloskey has emphasized in his book, "The Rhetoric of Economics," the mathematical formulations of economists are of little use unless they can be translated into arguments that policy makers and the public can understand and be willing to act upon.

The art of persuasion is a matter not of words alone but of heart and courage and charm. Mr. Heller had these qualities in abundance and used them lavishly inside the White House in dealing with the president and his political sides, most of whom were trained as lawyers. He fired memos at them and followed up with face-to-face lectures. He worked incredibly long hours and got his exercise in Washington by ignoring the elevators and running up and down the stairs at the old State Department building - the Executive Office of the President.

But Mr. Heller also carried his campaigns to the people. E WAS ALWAYS READY to spend time talking to reporters, being interviewed on television programs and speaking at public meetings. President Kennedy encouraged him to do that - to get out in front of the administration to see whether a new and controversial idea would fly or be shot

As good as Mr. Heller was in communicating economic ideas, his great distinction was that he brought to policy making the best professional economic thinking he could mobilize.

Although he enjoyed being chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and was by no means without vanity, he was secure and modest enough to bring to that body the stars of the economics profession, such as James Tobin (later a Nobel laureate), Kermit Gordon, Gardner Ackley, Robert Solow and Arthur M. Okun, and he continuously consulted outsiders, such as Paul A. Samuelson, the first American Nobelist in economics.

The economic policies of the Kennedy and Johnson years were essentially built on the theory of John Maynard Keynes that total demand for goods and services could be manipulated to prevent unemployment on one side and to stop inflation on the other.

Did the outbreak of inflation in the latter half of the 1960s represent a failure of those Keynesian policies,—or was it due to the unwillingness of President Johnson to heed his economists' advice? The enswer is both. At first, the economists of the Kennedy-Johnson era were inclined to blame the political leadership for failing to take their advice in time to head off inflation by reversing fiscal policy to restrain aggregate demand, with the economy approaching full employment.

As time wore on, however, it became clearer that there had See HELLER, Page 13

Salomon Moves on Harcourt

Has Rights to A 36% Stake

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatch WASHINGTON — Salomon Brothers Inc., the big U.S. securi-ties firm, disclosed in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing Friday that it had amassed the rights to acquire a 36 percent stake in Harcourt Brace Jovanovich Inc. through earlier purchases of convertible debentures.

The surprise announcement appears to dramatically change the equilibrium of a takeover fight for Harcourt, a prestigious U.S. text-book publisher.

The rights, if exercised, would appear to give Salomon a signifi-cant stake in Harcourt and the role of arbitrager in Harcourt's battle to ward off a proposed $2 billion takeover by Robert Maxwell, the British newspaper publisher, said John Reidy, an analyst with Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Harcourt's share price dipped 25 cents to close at $57.875 in trading on the New York Stock Exchange Salomon Inc., the securities firm's holding company, fell 25 cents to end at $34.50.

Harcourt rejected a $2 billion bid last month from Mr. Maxwell's British Printing & Communications Corp. and announced a $3 billion "poison pill" recapitaliza-tion plan designed to thwart the hostile takeover.

Mr. Maxwell withdrew his bid. but announced Tuesday that he would use proceeds from a new £630 million ($1 billion) rights issue in his fight to take over Harcourt. The British publisher's bid for Harcourt would have resulted in one of the largest mergers in the U.S. book publishing industry.

In its filing, Salomon told the SEC that it had bought 21,978 de-bentures, which have a face value of $1,000 each, in May and June as a "regular part" of its investment and arbitrage activities.

The Proton Saga, the Malaysian subcompact that is to be exported to the United States.

'Dream Car' Is Malaysia Nightmare

As Costs Soar, Few Believe Proton Can Compete in U.S.

By Patrick L. Smith SHAH ALAM, Malaysia — A few months from now, if all goes according to plan, a gleaming new factory on the outskirts of this small provincial capital will be thrust onto the world stage in one of the most prestigious of heavy industries.

Perusahaan Otomobil Nasional, or Proton, began building Malaysia's "national car" only two years ago. Proton, a joint venture with the Mitsubishi group of Japan, is now scheduled to start exporting two versions of the Proton Saga to the United States early in 1988.

Carved out of jungle and government-owned oil palm estates, the Shah Alam site is intended to be the fulfillment of a dream for Malaysia, which is anxious to advance from the uncertainty of commodity production to one of sleek industrial technology.

It is also the centerpiece of a highly ambitious industrial strategy, a sort of Malaysian "great leap forward" that was adopted by Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamad soon after he took office six years ago.

With a projected base price of about $5,000, the Proton Saga has an even chance of finding a niche in the lower end of the U.S. market, many industry analysis believe. Although somewhat underpowered - there are only 1,300cc and 1,500cc models the car generally has been well received locally and in a few test

But Shah Alam and the product manufactured there is less a dream than a national nightmare, leading economists and executives say. It has already cost Malaysia many millions of dollars in public investment funds that are unlikely to be recovered, these sources contend, and the move into exports is likely to cost many millions more.

"We are simply too inefficient to compete effectively in a market like the United States," a local investment analyst said. "If the Proton is a success, it will be only because Malaysians are

In recent interviews, Proton officials acknowledged that the company's production costs are 55,760 per unit for the smaller Saga and $5,920 for the larger one, indicating a minimum sub-sidy of almost 20 percent on models sold at the base price in the United States.

When freight charges and the cost of modifying the car for the U.S. market are added, according to industry analysts, the Proton's U.S. sales effectively could be as much as half-subsidized.

In Malaysia, the least expensive Proton sells for about $8,000. At this price, the company reported operating losses of $1,000 per unit in its first six months of production, the last period for which results have been made public.

Company officials are can-tious about Proton's entry into the United States, in part be-cause its distributor, Malcolm Bricklin, has had mixed success

Capital Gains and Dividend Credit Benefits to Be Reduced ing changes: the new structure of federal income tax rates and the

OTTAWA - The embattled government of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney late Thursday un-veiled a sweeping plan 6 overhaul Canada's tax system, the first such reform in 15 years, with a package that includes a limit on capital gains exemptions and a sharp cut in the dividend tax credit.

The tax revision was seen by observers here as a move that could determine the political fate of the Mulroney government, which has been battered in national polls by a series of scandals and management gaffes. The plan would bring tax relief to wage-earners by next year, but would put off a new sales tax thought certain to be controversial until after the next elections.

Even though the government has a large majority in the House of Commons, tax revision is such a volatile issue that Mr. Mulroney

Canada Announces Tax Reform Plan | Corporate Rate Will Drop, But Revenues Will Rise 10%

OTTAWA — Canada's corporate tax revenues are expected to increase by about five billion dollars ($3.72 billion) over the next five years under the reform plan, because of a broadened tax base and fewer exemptions, officials said Friday.

The plan will increase the effective average corporate tax rate to 19.6 percent from 18.7 percent of income reported on corporate financial statements, according to documents presented by Finance Minister Michael Wilson. Despite the lower official tax rates, federal revenue from corporate taxes will rise by about 10 percent overall. The increase comes from removing special tax incentives, which will broaden the tax base by Federal tax revenue from corporations are projected to increase by 470 million dollars in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1988, 410 million dollars in fiscal 1989, and 1.19 billion dollars in fiscal 1990. Officials said the changes will also treat different corporate sectors more equitably than before, make corporate tax revenues more stable and predictable, and include tough new measures to prevent tax avoidance.

The Finance Department documents estimated that new tax avoid-ance rules would increase corporate tax revenues by 2.24 billion dollars. However, Canada's general business tax rate will fall to 28 percent from 36 percent effective July 1, 1988.

The manufacturing business tax rate will be lowered to 26 percent from 30 percent on July 1, 1988, and further reduced in stages to 23 percent by July 1, 1991.

Interim Changes Would Broaden Federal Sales Tax

OTTAWA — Canada will broaden a federal sales tax levied on manufacturers before scrapping the system in favor of a multistaged sales tax, Finance Minister Michael Wilson told Parliament. He said the present sales tax is

"fundamentally flawed" because it puts more tax on Canadian produced goods than imported goods and adds a hidden tax on exports, making them less competitive. The interim changes, effective Jan. 1, 1988, would include applying the federal sales tax to marketing companies related to manufac turers; levying the tax at the wholesale level instead of the manufacturer for some products; and

To offset the changes for low-income Canadians, refundable tax credits would be increased, the Finance Department said. Mr. Wilson said that three alternative forms are being considered for a new sales tax, including a goods and services tax, a value added tax and a national sales tax that would combine existing federal and provincial levies into one system,

Saudi Oil Reserves Rise Despite Higher Output

JEDDAH — Proven oil and gas deposits in Saudi Arabia increased in 1986 despite higher oil output, the kingdom's main producing company, Aramco, said Friday.

Recoverable oil reserves in Aramco fields rose to 167 billion barrels by the end of the year from 166.5 billion in 1985, while gas reserves after last year's drought-hit 11.2 million, Braziljumped by 7.7 percent to 135.8 trillion cubic meter from 126.1 trillion (to 4 trillion cubic meters from 3.78 trillion), according to the compassad. ny's report.

At current production levels, this amount of crude reserves would last nearly to the year 2100. Many new reserves are likely to be discovered during the next century, though Saudi output is also likely to rise significantly as other nations' reserves run out.

Aramco, responsible for all Saudi production except about 200,000 barrels per day in the neutral zone between Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. increased production to 4,69 million barrels per day in 1986 from 3.04 million in 1985.

LONDON - Coffee futures prices on the London market are at 10-week lows, driven down by ample supplies, sluggish demand and uncertain prospects for a reintroduction of ex-port quotas in September. The only thing that can help the market now analysts, is for an oversupplied market, with gloomy implications for debt-laden Third World exporters. Brazil the biggest coffee exporter, is also the Third World's biggest debtor.

The current year's crop in Brazil is being harvested and will be around 35 million bags.

Chances for successful negotiations on new quotas look about 50-50, analysis and delegates said after a coffee organization board meeting in Bali two weeks ago. Brazil insists it will not accept any reallocation of its traditional quota, equal to 30 percent of the market. The United States, the higgest consumer, insists that quotas should be decided on the basis of criteria that include average exportable production, a formula that, after Brazil's low crop last year, would imply a cut in !

Market Rumors Link Volcker And Continental Illinois Post

NEW YORK - Continental Illinois Corp.'s stock rose Friday in active trading on the New York Stock Exchange amid a swirl of rumors, traders said. One was that Federal Reserve Chairman Paul A. Volcker would join the bank after his term expires in August.

Another rumor was that the bank would soon raise its loan loss eserves, traders said. Continental Illinois said it had no comment on the rumors.

A spokesman for the Federal Reserve said that Mr. Volcker had made no public comment about his future since June 2. On that day, at the White House, Mr. Volcker was asked about his plans and replied, "I have not the vaguest idea,"

By early afternoon Friday. Continental's stock had gained 25 cepts

Another trader said. "The story that started going around yesterday was that Volcker was going" to Continental. "But most people say why would Volcker go to Chicago when he can easily get another job at another place in New York and he near his family." he said.

Uganda, Mozambique Win Relief on Government Debt

PARIS — The creditor nations known as the Paris Club have agreed to a major rescheduling of the government-to-government debts of Uganda and Mozambique, the grouping said Friday.

At meetings here this past week, both countries were accorded terms more generous than usually granted by the creditors. Uganda was given 15 years to repay its debts with a six-year grace period while war-torn Mozambique was accorded an exceptionally long 20-year period, with 10 years' grace.

The Paris Club said it approved of both countries economic programs and wanted to assist their external payments prospects. It aid both countries had very heavy debt service obligations and low per capita income.

No details were available on the amounts involved, but last week Uganda's finance minister. Crispus Kiyonga, said he hoped for a rescheduling of $120 million. Uganda's total foreign debt is estimated Uganda and Mozambique are the third and fourth countries, after Zaire and Mauritania, to obtain rescheduling of debt since the Paris Club introduced new measures for the less developed nations. In London, meanwhile. Nigeria and Barclays Bank PLC said a target date of mid-September had been set for the signing of a package rescheduling Nigeria's medium-term public sector debt and outstanding letter of credit claims. Barclays is a co-chairman of the commercial bank steering committee for Nigeria.

Taiwan's Curbs on Capital Inflow Slow Currency's Rise

TAIPEI - Recent government moves to curb capital inflow have temporarily helped to slow the rise of Taiwan's foreign exchange re-serves and to stabilize the local dollar against the U.S. currency, according to officials and bankers. The central bank governor, Chang Chi-cheng, said Friday that reserves had risen only about $500 million in the past two weeks and the local dollar had appreciated more slowly against the U.S. dollar. He said the reserves, mainly the result of the merchandise trade surplus with the United States, rose at

GORBACHEV'S CHALLENGE: Economic Reform in the Age of High

TS there really hope that the Soviet Union is A entering a new liberalized era under the calight-ened leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev? Possibly, grants Marshall I. Goldman, who has written extensively on the Soviet Union and who believes that at the heart of any reform must be changes in the Soviet economy. But he paints a discouraging picture of such a prospect in his timely and instructive new book, "Gorbachev's Challenge: Economic Reform in the Age of High Technology."

It isn't that Gorbachev is insincere in his inten-tions or lacking in ability. Goldman, who is associate director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University, calls Gorbachev "in many respects . . . probably the strongest, most effective political manipulator the Soviet Union has had since the Bolshevik Revolution.

Nor is it that the Soviet economy doesn't need reforming. As Goldman argues, despite the present system's many strengths, the world is changing at a uphasis on heavy industry. What are the Soviet Union's options? Goldman sees three main choices. The first is "a far-reaching reform that emphasizes a heavy reliance on the market," or something resembling what Deng Xiao-ping has brought to the Chinese economy. The second is "an improved version of central planning and control," such as East Germany has tried to institute. And the third is "a hybrid system combining elements of each of the other systems."

rate and in a way that will eventually relegate the Soviet Union to the position of a second-rate power, both economically and militarily. The most acute challenge its leaders face is the impact of the Third Industrial Revolution, set off by the advent of the computer and the microprocessor. For Gorbachev, at least, the problem of a high-technology economy is that it demands a speed, adaptability and sense of initiative ill-suited to the Soviet system, with its cumbersome central-planning bureaucracy and its not only invite our critics, such as Marshall Gold-man," to visit, "but we read what he has to say," and an early version of his chapter on transferring foreign technology to the Soviet Union was "discussed and shown to Soviet authorities."

He recommends the first option - "a radical move toward decentralization and the market." One of his first steps "would be to seek a reduction in the role of the central planners and increase the authority of the enterprise managers." He would advise the legalization not only of private property for peasants and small-business men, but also of cooperative service and manufacturing operations. The state could continue to own and operate farms and factories, but they would have to learn to compete both among themselves and with the private and cooperative enterprises. The workers and managers would be rewarded with material incentives for their efforts, particularly for displays of extra creativity. . . . There would be more emphasis on consumer and innovator sovereignty and less

Nonetheless, Goldman remains gloomy about the rospects of implementing such recommendations. Though many of them have either been agreed upon in principle or advocated separately by Soviet reformers, there is bound to be strong resistance from those who believe "that the combined effect of such actions would be to end the Soviet system.

And what if Gorbachev fails to adapt the system to high technology? Why then presumably the Soviet Union will no longer be a first-rate power in the world. Will such a shortcoming prove fatal to its future? Although Goldman never confronts that question directly, he offers a hint of its answer in his projection of what may happen if Gorbacher chooses the third option and guides the economy "along much the same route it has been following "along much the same route it has been routed in since the beginning of the five-year plans" in 1930. "While Soviet technology may find itself falling farther and farther behind that of the rest of the world," Goldman concludes, "living conditions stroke lead over three of the world's best golfers, including the defending champion, Ray Floyd, in the first round of the 87th U.S. Open. Under totally overcast skies with wind and cool temperatures, enshaw sank a 60-foot birdie putt at No. 11 and a 35-footer for a birdie at the 13th hole on his way to a three-under-par 67 at The Olympic Club's Lake Course. But it was his three-foot putt on the 18th hole for a birdie after an excellent wedge approach that finally gave Cren-shaw his slight edge over Seve Ballesteros of Spain, Tommy Nakajima of Japan and Floyd, who each rounds of 70. That'll be very close." On a day when many of the world's finest golfers had inconsisent rounds, it was Floyd who layed the most steady golf. Floyd, who at 43 became the oldest winner of a U.S. Open last year, coped well with a 6,700-yard (5,124-meter) course that has no water and only one fairway bunker. While others paid a severe price for landing in rough or greenside bunkers, Floyd hit 16 greens in regulation, an un-

The biggest surprise of the first round was Jack Nicklaus, who has not been shooting like his old self. Winner of four U.S. Opens and now 47, Nicklaus shot a par 70. He would have been closer had he not three-putted the 18th green for a Crenshaw, a sentimentalist about golf and one of the game's recognized historians, came close to winning the 1975 Open before a lightning storm hit in the third round at Medinah. Returning to the course after the weather cleared, Crenshaw hit his tee shot at No. 17 into the water and finished tied for third the next day. He has won only one major tournament — the 1984 Masters.

Ballesteros has four major victories -two British Opens and two Masters. Last Sunday he blew a playoff against J.C. Snead at the Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic when he gambled to drive for the green on the short, par-4 first extra hole and missed Snead parred and won.

Ballesteros achieved his best first-round score in a U.S. Open. Nakajima's biggest threat to win a major came in last year's British Open when he was second to Greg Norman going into the final round. But he faded as Norman scored his only major victory.

(That day the Orioles broke a 10-game losing streak and wore orange shirts instead of the usual home whites).

"Wasn't me, ask the general manager," Rip-ken said. "I don't think the orange shirts had one thing to do with our winning a ball game. I didn't see an orange shirt get one hit or throw one pitch. There were players inside those shirts who did that.

Fleck, O'Grady: Odd Soul Mates

Fleck is 64, quiet, wary of the skepticism, and bitterness, that followed his victory over the great Hogan. "Who is this guy?" everyone said when he won.

He was a brash young kid then,' Fleck recalled. 'I wanted to throw him out.

O'Grady is 36, talkative, notorious for his battles with the PGA Tour establishment and his frequent discourses on the spirirual aspects of golf. Almost everyone knows O'Grady, although, after listening to him, many still say "Who is this guy?"

O'Grady and Fleck played golf together, became friendly and discovered they had a common vision. "There's a spirit in the game," O'Grady said. "Jack showed up today and told me, I shot 76 the first day but I was patient and I won it. So be patient.' It meant a lot to me to have him out there today. I had been waiting for that one magic putt to get me going, and after that, I made it."

As he moved anonymously through the gallery, Fleck noted that the rough was higher in 1955 than this year, and that O'Grady was hitting 7-irons from some places that he had used 3-irons.

In a round with five birdies and six bogeys, O'Grady dis-played the patience Fleck had once, when he bogeyed No. 17.

As he watched the 17th, however. Fleck perceived O'Grady's anxiety and became a little anxious himself. "I've got to get to the 18th green," he said, hurrying off. "I've got to calm him down."

Coney Island Snapshots

when he took Lula Lolas to the Coney Island beach in 1946, his motivation was to get a peck at her legs. He liked what he saw enough to propose matrimony.

He proposed atop the Wonder Wheel, Coney Island's towering and wondrous Ferris wheel. In his enthusiasm, he promised to buy her the wheel if she answered yes.

She did say yes. But it turned out the only wheels Vourderis could come up with at the time were the two underneath the pushcart carrying the hot dogs he sold. "A wheel is a wheel," Vourderis recently recalled saying in 1948 after his wed-

Thirty-five years after his wedding day, Vourderis, a Greek immigrant, had followed the American dream through pushcarts and ever larger restaurants back to Coney Island - four miles long, the southern terminus of live subway lines and the only place in the United States that Sigmund Freud said interested him.

The magnificent Wonder Wheel -the standard backdrop for Vourderis family portraits, according to two of their four children - was for sale then. Vourderis had scraped together enough to buy it, and Mrs. Vourderis got a late wedding gift.

"You can do whatever you want in this country," Vourderis said, pointing to the wheel that by now has carried more than 24 million people round and round through the incandescent Coney Island sky.

But even though the sea air still smells of Coppertone and cotton candy. Coney Island is a faint echo of its former self. The number of rides - which, unlike modern parks, are mainly owned by individuals — has fallen to 35, less than half the number a half century ago. The number of visitors has dropped to 15 million a year from more than 20 million.

The Vourderis family paid $250,000 for the wheel and an equal amount to repair it.

But that is only the beginning of Vourderis's ambitious plans, in-cluding his desire to hold a wedding on the Wonder Wheel. For the first couple who ask, he will admit 50 guests free and supply "music, food, everything."

Description of the Service of the Ser

Deferred, even broken dreams are nothing new to Coney Islanders

- the people who live there, not those who visit on a nice holiday weekend. In the 1950s, their community fell into steep decline as young people left for the suburbs. As happened elsewhere in the city, the elderly residents who remained there could not afford to repair their aging homes. Hopes for casino gambling were unrealized. Most people seem to doubt developers' schemes for a baseball stadium, a new amusement park and big luxury apart-

"Coney Island has been promised a lot of things," said Jim Prince, who has owned a butcher shop on Mermaid Avenue for the last 40 years. "Things never seem to get off the ground."

Coney Island has long had a powerful hold on the American imagination - and still does if the crowd at the opening of a current Municipal Art Society exhibition, "Coney Island Comeback," is an

Irving Berlin, Eddie Cantor and Jimmy Durante sang in Coney Is-land. Cary Grant walked on stilts. Jack Dempsey fought, Mae West purred and John Philip Sousa led the band.

Diamond Jim Brady came to gamble, Boss Tweed fled to Coney Island when he escaped from pris-on and even Carrie Nation could not tame the sandy saloous.

Lamarcus A. Thompson built the world's first roller coaster in 1884 and New Yorkers learned to love being scared witless. Generations of ever more frightening roller coasters followed. Today, only the Cyclone - 86-feet-high with more twists and turns than a burlesque queen - continues to terrify.

What has happened, experts suggest, is that a couple of generations of Americans have been weaned on theme parks, television and middie-class values. The hoopia and humbuggery carnival goers have long loved, they say, does not sit well with devotees of Disney.

France's Stern New Chief Rabbi

"Jews tend to be extremely individualistic and independent. said Rabbi Joseph Sitruk, who was elected this week to the post inaugurated by Napoleon Bonaparte. He will take office in Janu-

He went on to tell a joke about a reclusive Jew who went to live alone on a desert island. A journalist sent to interview the recluse some time later found he had built two synagogues.

"Why two," the journalist asked, "when there's only one of you?"

"Well." the Jew explained, "one's the synagogue I go to, and the other one is the one I don't go

Sitruk said that something of that attitude exists among the es-timated 700,000 Jews of France - the fourth-largest Jewish com-munity in the world after those in the United States, Israel and the Soviet Union.
"I will do everything, with the help of God, to ensure that this community is as united as possible, as close as possible," he said after his election.

That may not be easy. Sitruk, a 42-year-old, Tunisian-born Sephardi who is currently chief rab-bi of Marseille, has a reputation as a fundamentalist. A large part of his future flock, after years of integration into French society. has a reputation for liberalism. But Sitruk made it clear that he is not prepared for compromise.

"I am a man of dialogue," he said, "and I am ready to talk to anyone who wants to talk to me." But to those who disagree with his interpretation of Jewish law, he said, "There's one thing I would like to make clear, and that is that I am not about to change the law to suit their pleasure. I do not think this would be doing people a favor. My path is not the easiest but it's the one I believe to be the true one."

He said there would be no relaxation of the strict rules on marriages between Jews and gen-tiles enforced by the rabbinical tribunal in Paris under the outgoing chief rabbi, René-Samuel Sirat. He was the first Sephardi to be elected to the post, in 1980. In 1985, Sirat widened the rift between modern-minded and traditionalist Jews - and more particularly between liberal Ashkenazim and Orthodox Sephardim — by opposing the marriage of Eric de Rothschild, a member of the banking family, to a Roman Catholic Italian counters, Maria-Béatrice Corraciolo.

Sirat refused to authorize the conversion of the countess, which was necessary both for a religious wedding and for the children of the marriage to be considered

Eventually, her conversion was carried out by the chief rabbi of Morocco. This enabled her to be married by Sirat's liberal Ashkewith the president of the Central Consistory in Paris, Jean-Paul Elkann, acting as witness, Jewish community sources said Sirat was unwilling to undertake a second seven-year term as a result of the controversy. But he supported the candidacy of Sitruk, who ran effectively unopposed in the election by the 200member Central Consistory.

Sitruk made it clear that he, too, would oppose religious con-version for the sake of marriage. "It must be that people who want to convert, and whom we accept, do so for perfectly motivated readaism no advantage to make changes merely to bring it into line with existing social customs. "Take the example of adultery," he said. "Under French legislation it was a felony 100 years. then it became a crime, then a misdemeanor until today it's something that is hardly mentioned in court. It is precisely the opposite in Judaism. It is not the laws that must adapt to the customs, but the customs that must adapt to the laws."

Sephardim outnumber Ashkonazim in France as a result of a large influx from North Africa in the 1950s and early 1960s. Of the Sephardim, those coming from Tunisia like Sitruk are considcred the most fundamentalist. Sitruk gained a reputation as a good administrator and public speaker in Marsaile, where he Sitruk, the father of eight children, said he hopes to make Judaism in France "more smiling more friendly, more human," and open to dialogue with Christians and Moslems. He promised to use his position to speak out against son and the rise of the right National Front, which he said threatens to sully France's "vocation" as a home for liberty and the free exchange of ideas.

"Personally," he added, "I do not see myself as being the rabbi of any particular group. I think a rabbi must be a rabbi for all Jews. even those who do not accept his ideas. On the question of orthodoxy, I would say that a rabbi who does not know how to be demanding on himself complete-ly lacks credibility."
